Paul Simon de Gérin Souillac Paul Simon de Gérin Souillac (1561–1624) was a French Roman Catholic bishop and cardinal. Biography Paul Simon de Gérin Souillac was born in 1561, the son of Arnaud de Gérin and Jeanne de Saint-Remy. He was educated at the Academy of Reims. Pope Gregory XV made him a bishop in Paris in 1623. He was a great patron of the Sorbonne. A year later, on 15 December 1624, he was elected Bishop of Orléans, a post he held until his death. He was created Cardinal-Priest of San Crisogono in the consistory of 27 February 1625. Rhombomere (r) formation in the chick hindbrain is the earliest well-defined example of a coordinated embryological process involving formation of new segments and segmental cell lineages. The process of r formation has been divided into two stages, "rhombomere-forming" and "r-specific." In this report, we have investigated early steps in the r-forming stage using three maternal/embryonic genes which are expressed in the rhombomeres and the neural tube. The most interesting outcome of our analysis is that these genes show segment-specific expression at these early times. At the appropriate stages of neural tube and r development, the genes are expressed either predominantly in r2 and/or r5 or r3 and/or r4. This differential expression suggests that the segmental patterning within rhombomeres is initiated prior to r formation. This early determination presumably results from the earlier expression of these genes than the r-specific genes. These early segmental expression patterns are maintained in cells as they migrate inwards to the ri, the r-specific subpopulation, suggesting that the early expressed genes are essential for segmental patterning within rhombomeres. There is evidence for asymmetric cell division of the very earliest neurons in the chick
